2014 Political Interns – Washington, DC

Austin Ko

Johns Hopkins University

Intern at Office of Congresswoman Gloria Negrete Mcleod

Austin Ko is a rising junior at Johns Hopkins University, originally from New Jersey. He is currently studying Public Health with an interest in how sociological factors affect access to health care. Outside of class, Austin is an active leader in the Taiwanese and Asian American communities through his involvement with the JHU Taiwanese American Students Association, JHU Inter-Asian Council, and National Board of the Intercollegiate Taiwanese American Students Association (ITASA), along with other campus organizations. In his free time, he enjoys catching up on TV, cooking, and perfecting his green tea white chocolate chip cookie recipe.

Margaret (Maggie) Yang

Williams College

Intern at Office of Congressman Jared Polis

Margaret Yang is a sophomore at Williams College pursuing a major in Political Economy with a concentration in Justice and Law. Having been brought up as a passionate Taiwanese American, she has embraced her heritage by attending various summer programs such as TANG (Taiwanese American Next Generation) and TAF (Taiwanese American Foundation). Later on, her participation in the 2013 Formosa Foundation Ambassador Program inspired her to pursue a career in public policy as a way to serve the public, allow the voices of the minority to be heard, and to bring light to issues concerning the Taiwanese American community.

Vivian Tsai

Barnard College, Columbia University

Intern at Office of Congresswoman Judy Chu

Vivian is a rising senior attending Barnard College, Columbia University double majoring in political science and psychology. She intends on attending law school in the future and pursue a career in public interests, but is also open to other career possibilities. She loves spontaneous adventures in different cities and enjoys delicious food.
